Are Unexpected Deaths Being Adequately Investigated?

"We are concerned that the deaths of the vaccinated are not being adequately investigated" said a spokesperson from New Zealand Doctors Speaking Out with Science (NZDSOS) referring to an open letter to the Chief Coroner of New Zealand. "We are requesting confirmation that a thorough and detailed assessment of all deaths amongst vaccinated New Zealanders takes place".

NZDSOS have significant concerns based on their observations and analysis of data around deaths as well as on several official documents relating to the Pfizer Comirnaty vaccine rollout in New Zealand.

These documents include an Adverse Event Report from the Pfizer data release in which 1223 deaths were reported within the first three months of post-marketing surveillance. They also refer to a government document from February 2021 released under the Official Information Act (OIA) which implies the government was expecting up to 1.1% of vaccinees to have a severe or serious adverse reaction, requiring those who experienced such a reaction to have time off work.

NZDSOS also details possible mechanisms by which the injection could be killing New Zealanders through blood clots, strokes, Sudden Adult Death Syndrome (SADS), cancer, myocarditis, autoimmune conditions and overwhelming infections. "We question whether specific testing for spike protein is being undertaken during autopsies", said the NZDSOS spokesperson.

They note, that although three deaths have been determined likely due to the vaccine (three young people who would not have been expected to die from Covid-19), these are still waiting for the Coroner's final assessment.

The significant length of time for processing coronial investigations is also being questioned. NZDSOS wants to know how New Zealanders can be reassured that signals of vaccine harm will be picked up in a timely manner if coronial reports take at least a year, and in some cases, up to four years to be completed. "This is woefully inadequate if we are expecting the coronial service to alert us to significant signals of vaccine harm in time to prevent other people from suffering similar harms."

NZDSOS requests confirmation that political interference in the coronial process has been, and will be, avoided. The nation has witnessed Prime Minister, Jacinda Ardern advising the country that a teenager's death was nothing to do with the vaccine within a few days of the death, knowing full well the investigation would take months to complete.

In addition, NZDSOS are hoping for reassurance that the Coronial Service has not received 'guidance' similar to that which doctors have received requiring them not to say anything which might promote 'vaccine hesitancy'. This could potentially include certifying that death was contributed to, or caused by, a vaccine.

NZDSOS is awaiting a response from the Chief Coroner.
