

Media Release

NZDSOS and New Zealand Rising Invite New Zealanders to Red Remembrance Day, tomorrow the 15th of November.

14 November 2022

This day marks one year from the enactment of the covid "vaccine" mandates for healthcare workers, teachers, defence and border workers. It also marks the day that New Zealand was divided into two classes - the "clean" and the "unclean". Many individuals were injured, many died and many lost jobs, businesses, family and friends. This, with no improvement in the outcomes of not only covid cases but covid illness, covid deaths and deaths from all-causes.

The enormity of the consequences are only just being revealed with a significant increase in excess deaths particularly in the young, a faltering economy and a health system that is unable to cope. Of course, the mainstream media is becoming either increasingly shrill in their support of the jobs or silent in their ignoring of the very obvious destruction that the mandates wrought on individuals and on the country. Many individuals are just pleased that the whole thing is "over" and prefer to look away.

NZDSOS has not looked away and we will not forget.

We continue to pressure the government and the authorities to abandon the covid injections, acknowledge the harm and undertake a real "Truth and Reconciliation" type investigation. Our approaches through all the channels that would usually be honoured in a democracy have been met with either silence or persecution.

In memory of all those who were hurt, whether injected or not, NZDSOS in collaboration with New Zealand Rising is holding nationwide gatherings tomorrow, the 15th of November 2022 between 12 and 2 pm. These will be peaceful gatherings, encouraging the coming together of all to recognise the time we did it hard and acknowledge that we still are. We will be remembering the suffering and celebrating the resilience of New Zealanders.

We encourage all New Zealanders to wear red in remembrance of injury and to come together. Bring your sandwiches, sun protection and an appetite to meet others in the same giant waka. The way forward is just beginning and will require tremendous effort and cohesion.

Please see here for venues.

Together, we can take back our health, our freedom, and our sovereignty.